

HOW TWO WOMEN ESCAPED OPERATIONS

Doctor Advised Use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Happy Results in Both Cases

St. Joseph, Missouri.—"Both of my sides swelled and hurt me so that I could not move or do any of my work. There was heavy pressure and pains through my lower organs and the doctor told me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for these troubles. He said I had this one chance, and if the Vegetable Compound did not help me nothing but an operation would. After taking several bottles I felt it was helping me and now I am able to do my own work. If my testimonial will help others I shall be glad for them to read it and hope your Vegetable Compound will do them as much good as it did me."—Mrs. WM. LOCKMAN, 513 N. 4th St., St. Joseph, Mo.

White Plains, N. Y.—"I had such a pain that I could hardly walk and the doctor said that I needed an operation. I was sick for a year before I started taking your medicine and I could not work. I saw your advertisement in a little book and that is how I came to take Lydia E. Pinkham's medicines. I have been taking the Vegetable Compound and Lydia E.

Some female troubles may through neglect reach a stage when an operation is necessary. But most of the commoner ailments are not the surgical ones; they are not caused by serious displacements, tumors, or growths, although the symptoms may appear the same.

When disturbing ailments first appear, take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to relieve the present distress and prevent more serious troubles. Many letters have been received from women who have been restored to health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound after operations have been advised by attending physicians.

Hard to Satisfy.

A few years ago educators complained that pupils knew too much about sports and too little about politics, and now they point to the ignorance of sports among pupils as an indication that they don't keep up with the times.—James J. Montague.

Expansive Love.

Ethel—Oh, Richard, when we are married I don't think I could live in a little flat.

Fiance—You don't love me when you say that, Ethel.

Ethel—Oh, yes, I do; but not on such a small scale.

"He Who Plants a Tree—"

He who plants a tree—
He plants love,
Tents of coolness spreading out above,
Heaven and earth help him who plants a tree
And his work its own reward shall be.

By JOHN DICKINSON SHERMAN

IN THE spring man's fancy turns to growing things—grass, flowers, trees. And where no grass grows he feels an impulse to sow the seed; where flowers are lacking he would fill the need with bloom; where no shade is to soften the sun's glare he would plant trees. So Arbor Day is really the most national thing in the world. And it's natural to have it in the spring—though fall is the better time for planting trees.

Arbor Day nowadays is pretty generally observed and it's what you might call a growing holiday, since the day has come to mean more than the mere planting of trees for the sake of having the trees.

Still, Arbor Day is not yet a fixed day, observed all over the country on the same date. For example, in Minnesota, New Mexico, North and South Dakota and several other states the governor fixes the date of observance. In Illinois the governor appoints the day, which is usually observed, the third Friday in April in the northern and the fourth Friday of October in the southern part of the state. Arizona has selected the first Monday in February; Georgia, the first Friday in December; Idaho, the first Friday after May 1; Rhode Island, the second Friday in May; Kansas, October 12. And so it goes. April, on the whole, is the favored month.

April of this year certainly was full of Arbor Day and tree-day spirit. In it fell the fiftieth anniversary of the institution of Arbor Day; the ninetyeth anniversary of the birth of J. Sterling Morton, father of Arbor Day; the fiftieth anniversary of the establishment of the famous Arnold Arboretum, and the fortieth anniversary of the founding of the American Forestry association at Cincinnati.

J. Sterling Morton has no rival for the title of father of Arbor Day. He was born at Adams, Jefferson county, N. Y., in 1832. He was graduated from Union college in 1854, and the following year settled in Nebraska, first at Bellevue and later at Nebraska City, where he founded and edited the Nebraska City News, the first newspaper to be established in that state.

In 1903, he entered the cabinet of President Cleveland as secretary of agriculture, remaining in office until 1897.

At a meeting of the state board of agriculture of Nebraska, held in Lincoln January 4, 1872, Mr. Morton introduced a resolution "that Wednesday, the 10th day of April, 1872, be especially set apart and consecrated for tree-planting in the state of Nebraska."

Two years later, Governor Furnas of Nebraska set aside the third day of April as Arbor day, and in 1885, the state legislature passed an act designating April 22, Mr. Morton's birthday, as Arbor day, and making it a legal holiday.

Nearly a billion trees have been planted in Nebraska since the institution of Arbor day. Instead of being the "treeless state," Nebraska is now one of the leaders in practical forestry, it being estimated that 700,000 acres have been planted in trees. In 1895, in recognition of this great change, the Nebraska legislature passed a resolution giving the state the popular name of "Tree Planter's State."

Kansas, much the same kind of state as Nebraska, followed its neighbor's lead in 1875. Minnesota soon joined the procession; it had lots of pine, but its forests were going fast. Tennessee and North Dakota got interested about this time.

In 1882, Ohio gave a new angle to the idea of Arbor day. A convention was in session in Cincinnati which resulted in the formation of the American Forestry association. Twenty thousand school children marched to Eden park and planted trees. This, called the "Cincinnati Plan," was the inauguration of Arbor Day as a school festival.

Perhaps the first divergence from the idea of tree-planting as a measure of utility was the plan of the General Federation of Women's clubs for decorative roadside planting of the Lincoln highway from coast to coast. It has been given charge of the work and has worked out comprehensive planting plans. Indigenous trees and shrubs are to be used; nut and fruit trees will be included for the benefit of the birds. Federated women's clubs in states through which the Lincoln highway does not pass will see to the planting of feeder roads.

The World war gave and added a new phase of tree-planting and an added interest: the planting of trees in remembrance both of those who gave up their lives for their country, and for the living who offered their lives. The American Forestry association originated the plan; the General Federation of Women's clubs incorporated it in their general planting scheme; many organizations took it up. Now it is a part of the spirit of Arbor Day, though not by any means confined to Arbor Day celebrations.

The photograph given herewith shows the planting of a tree in remembrance of William McKinley, martyred President of the United States. The location is Authors' grove, Atlanta, Ga. The planting was under the auspices of the Sons and Daughters of the Confederacy and Veterans of Foreign Wars. The three children are William D. McKinley, a grandnephew of the martyred President; Margaret D. and James Fuller McKinley.

The causes of good roads and tree-planting have become linked through the memorial tree idea. Good roads are now being lined with memorial trees and called "Roads of Remembrance." This has been done in many states, and the next generation will ride over many a stately and beautiful highway on which this generation is at work.

Out of the increasing interest in the various phases of the Arbor Day spirit and observance has grown the "Hall of Fame of Trees," established by the American Forestry association. Famous trees all over the country—and their name is legion—being registered, with photographs, and recorded. The same organization has also established a registry for the recording of all "Memorial Trees" planted.

A hint of the importance and value of trees to modern life is contained in the proclamation of Acting Governor Earl Cooley of Colorado. He said in part:

"Trees have been and always will be closely interwoven with the happiness and prosperity of the people of Colorado. Their value is measureless for the maintenance of streamflow for irrigation, for the prevention of floods, for shelter to birds and other wild life, for the protection of soil, for the production of lumber, for the preservation of our magnificent scenery and for the health and recreation of the people."

Here are a few of the recent activities brought about by the spirit of Arbor Day: they show how firm a hold tree-planting in its various phases has taken upon the people in all parts of the country:

President Harding issued a proclamation urging the governors of the states to designate the week of April 16-22 as forest protection week, and the last day of that week, April 22 as the golden anniversary of Arbor Day. The John Burroughs clubs planted memorial trees on the grounds of the Lincoln memorial. The trees were red oaks placed in the shape of a half wheel for Burroughs, Whitman, Emerson, Thoreau and Muir.

The colleges have taken up memorial tree-planting with a vim. For example, the University of Washington, at Seattle, has planted 58 trees in memory of the 57 men and one woman student who gave up their lives in the World war. Hereafter on Armistice day additional trees will be planted in memory of these student heroes.

A comprehensive plan to reforest middle western states was considered at the Chicago forestry conference, April 19-20. Hundreds of delegates representing every section of the United States were present. Governors of Illinois, Indiana, Wisconsin, Michigan, Minnesota, Ohio and Missouri attended the conference.
